The "New York Herald Tribune", a New York City daily newspaper carried an article in the September 28, 1958 issue entitled, "Anti-Reds See Revolt Rising in Soviet Union." This article stated that NTS arranged a conference in Frankfurt, Germany, at which more than 200 delegates, representing leading groups of Russian emigres, attended. The delegates predicted a bitter struggle for absolute power in the Soviet Union which could lead to another revolution.

Professor IVAN A. KURGANOV told the delegates that the general intelligence level of the Russian people is higher than ever before and they are becoming dissatisfied. KURGANOV said it will take some time yet for the people to show their dissatisfaction in terms of revolution.

EVGENI R. ROMANOV, editor of "Possev" said imminent trouble in the Soviet Union has arisen as a result of three factions, struggling for supreme power. The three factions, the editor said, are the top Communist party functionaries; the heads of state administration, the armed forces and the nation's economy, and the minority group of orthodox Stalinists and dogmatists.

This article went on to state that information from MTS underground groups which are located in every major Soviet city, state positively that 25,000,000 to 30,000,000 pamphlets so far smuggled into the Soviet Union annually have already done their work well.

THE NTS

I. Introduction

Of all existing Russian emigre groups the NTS (Natsional'no-Trudovoy Soyuz, the National Labor Alliance) has proved in many respects to be the most active, determined and well organized. It is certainly the most self-contained, being the well-spring and carrier of an ideological system of its own. Its activities cover a wide variety of operational interests (discussed below in Part V of this report), which are integrated, from its own point of view, in a general plan having as its ultimate objective the overthrow of the Soviet regime by revolution.

II. History

The NTS grew out of the emigrant Russian youth located in Europe in the late twenties and early thirties. This body of emigrant youth, disillusioned by the feeble and fruitless attempts of their elders to unite and to take positive action against the Bolshevik regime, decided on its own to organize a group of emigrants which would continue the struggle. The first congress of this new organization, which we may consider the birthday of NTS, took place in Belgrade on 1 July 1930. Participants in this congress included delegates from Bulgaria, France, Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia and Holland. The first official designation of this new union was NSRM, translated as the "National Alliance of Russian Youth." In March 1932, in Sofia, the first issue of the newspaper "Za Rossiyu" (For Russia) was published. This paper remained for some time the official organ of the group and is today its internal organ, devoted primarily to ideology.

In 1936 the official designation NTS was adopted and the organization appeared as a legal, properly registered social organization in Yugoslavia, Bulgaria, France and, until 1938, in Germany. In 1939, at the beginning of the war, NTS also had groups in Poland, Czechoslovakia, Belgium, Latvia and the Far East. During the pre-war period NTS had its greatest number of members concentrated in Yugoslavia, France and Poland. In addition, "general representations" and "otdels" existed in England, Finland, Italy, Hungary, the United States and Austria. It was also in this period that NTS carried on its covert operations against the Soviet Union with the support of the Polish IS, which provided the organization with facilities for cross-border and other penetration operations into the USSR.

During the war, NTS began an extremely interesting phase of its career. With its center in Berlin and operating at first illegally and later in outright opposition to the German government, the NTS succeeded in establishing its workers in the German-occupied territories.

of the USSR, in carrying on its propaganda (including anti-Nazi propaganda) in prisoner-of-war camps, and in lending considerable assistance to the VLASOV movement. After the outbreak of war, leading members of MIS moved to Berlin and attempted to place themselves in various German ministries, particularly those concerned with the war in the East. This gave the MIS a wider basis for the distribution of its propaganda and placed it close to the target, namely, the USSR.

Perhaps the most significant contribution of the MIS during the war years was the support it gave to the VLASOV movement and the influence it was able to exert over it. KAZAKHIN, an MIS member and former editor of "Za Beselyu" became editor of the Vlasovite newspaper. MIS succeeded in enrolling General ISHCHIN, VLASOV's chief of staff and the commander of Debendorf, where Russians were trained for work in the East. Moreover, MIS substantially influenced the contents of the Prague Manifesto, which laid down the terms of reference for a full Russian contribution to the war on the Eastern front and the overthrow of the Soviet regime.

With the defeat of Germany at the conclusion of the war, these MIS members who found themselves in the Western zones of Germany began to rebuild the organization. One of the first aims of the group was to save as many as possible of the masses of ex-Soviet citizens who were striving to escape forcible repatriation from Western Europe. In the early months after the war, "otdels" were organized in DP camps in West Germany, Austria and Italy. However, there were two serious defections from MIS ranks: first, a large number of newer members, mostly former Vlasovites, protesting the tight discipline and narrow hierarchy of MIS, formed a new organization called HROER; second, a much smaller segment of MIS in France, while continuing to espouse the Solidarist ideology, split off as a new group. In the very recent past, there has been some additional splintering of MIS members who object to the emphasis placed by the leadership on operational work and who feel that ideological considerations are being neglected. However, the stability of the organization has been satisfactory up to the present day, and these political fluctuations within the Russian emigration do not appear to have seriously affected its operational potential.

With the advent of the Cold War, MIS' main effort, both through its own press and through such emergent representatives as BOLDYREV, was turned to the West. Generally, their campaign centered about the idea that the Russian was not to be confused with the Communist, that the best ally which the Western world could find was the Russian people, and that revolution--which could prevent a war--was possible in the USSR. Specifically, the group went to some lengths to advertise itself as the right instrument for such a revolution. Some highly colored claims made by BOLDYREV, one-time MIS representative in the United States, undoubtedly did the organization more harm than good and led to strong suspicion that the group's boasted activities were wholly fabrications. If, as it turned out, many of them were, it is also true that given the opportunity to act, MIS proved itself to be thoroughly and uncompromisingly willing to take action.

III. Organization

The highest legislative organ in the framework of NTS is the Supreme Council (Sovet Soyuz). It consists of 15 members who are elected by the members of the "Ruling Circle" selected by local NTS branches are approved or rejected by the Supreme Council. In addition, the Supreme Council elects its own president for a term of three years, the so-called "Executive Bureau" (Ispolnitelny Buro), and the "Court of Conscience and Honor". The president of the Supreme Council is automatically President of NTS.

While basic matters of policy and ideology are determined, in the final analysis, by the "Ruling Circle" (Congress), the Supreme Council--as its name would imply--has sweeping powers and a wide latitude of action, especially in cases of emergency. At present, it is said to enjoy the confidence and support of the rank-and file members of NTS.

The Executive Bureau fulfills the dual purpose of the highest administrative organ and the highest operational organ of the organization. Its five members, who are elected by the Supreme Council, occupy themselves full time in organizational and revolutionary work. Located at Frankfurt, the Executive Bureau maintains constant contact with the various "otdels" scattered throughout the world, forwards them political literature, solicits funds from them, distributes to them plans of the organization and, in general, endeavors to keep the various local bodies informed and functioning.

The members of the "Ruling Circle" or Congress (approximately 100) are situated in many different areas of the world. Often they are the leaders of the "otdels". Because of the great distances at which they are located from the NTS Center, it is a practical impossibility to convene the whole "Ruling Circle" under existing circumstances.

The various branches of NTS are of two kinds, depending on their size and importance. An "otdel" or division usually has fifty or more members. A "generalnoye predstavitelstvo" or general representation has less. Each branch chief is responsible to the Executive Bureau in Frankfurt for the cells or sub-groups located in the country of his residence.

In 1952 there were approximately 1050 normally accepted members of NTS throughout the world. The largest number of these were in the following countries: The United States (160 members), Germany (250 members), the United Kingdom (100 members), France (100 members), Morocco (80 members), and Belgium (50 members). Not included in these figures are "peripheral" members or sympathizers who have not actually joined the organization but offer a potential that can also be exploited. In estimating the number of such persons, NTS points to the circulation of its official organ "FOSEV", 4000 copies, noting that among emigres one copy of a newspaper is ordinarily read by more than one person.

IV. Ideology, Political Program and the Theory of Revolution

The credo of NTS--Solidarism--was <sup>created</sup> quite deliberately as an antithesis to, and potential weapon against, the philosophical and political beliefs propagated by Soviet Communism. Its appearance seems to have been singularly premeditated and lacking in spontaneity, being preceded rather than followed by the concept of anti-bolshevik revolution, and in effect being a rationalization and instrument of the latter.

This perhaps has nothing to do with the sincerity with which Solidarism was or is accepted among NTS members. Nevertheless, it is interesting to note that the true and fundamental driving force behind it remains a pure desire to destroy the Soviet regime. As the NTS theory of propaganda still maintains, it is not enough to be "against". In order to achieve action one must also be "for" and must furthermore know "how". The question of "how" is considered under their theory of revolution, below. The question of being "for" something accounts for the birth of Solidarism.

The kernel of Solidarism is the idea of synthesis. It begins as an anti-Marxist postulate: rather than a struggle between classes (viz., the intelligentsia, the workers and the peasants, no others being recognized), there must be harmony between them. Solidarism denies that the Hegelian theory of struggle is valid and asserts, on the contrary, that harmony is a basic element of nature and of all life. In the political sphere, the continuing maintenance of this harmony is the task of government. Solidarism proposes to establish its own dynamic, to throw aside all thoughts of the restoration of things in the pre-1917 image, and furthermore to stand apart, essentially, from "westernism". It attempts to make a synthesis of free enterprise and state control, of liberty and justice, of individual rights on contrast with the demands of society.

From the higher level of its Solidarist creed, NTS has deduced a concrete political program for a future Russia. This program has a great many good points, especially in its more general portions which postulate the fundamental civic rights, but it also leaves much to be desired in many respects. Unanswered in its political program is the role that the NTS itself would play in a future free Russia. However, close acquaintance with NTS leaders and ideas permits us to conclude at least this: if the Solidarist philosophy was forged as a weapon of the members' revolutionary zeal, the political program is an even further remove from the all-absorbing interest of the revolution. The NTS leaders laconically admit that a great deal of thinking still has to be done in this sphere. The impression is that the thinking which has already been done was done some time ago and there has really been little opportunity to go into the matter since then. Revolution is what counts.

Since the war, NTS has tried to develop a new approach to the theory of revolution which would take into consideration the extraordinary difficulties of performing revolutionary work of any kind in the USSR, and thus to have in hand a blueprint which would in itself appeal to and guide the actions of the masses which are to be "revolutionized". The author of this new approach is Poremaki, whose brochure "Toward a Theory of National Revolution" has been accepted as the group's official catechism on the subject. This theory can be summarized as follows:

Poremaki compares the pre-1917 Russia to the present USSR as targets of revolutionary activity and concludes that today's situation radically differs from that existing in the Czarist era. The chief energies of anti-Czarist revolutionary activity, he says, had to be directed toward creating a rift between the government and the people, and such purely negative measures were almost sufficient in themselves to strengthen the revolutionary forces while weakening the government. In the present situation it is hardly necessary to create such a rift, because this already exists; but the very growth of this rift causes the government to tighten its grip, but even at an extreme of suppression does not seem to lead to a revolutionary explosion. The problem, therefore, is not to create a rift, but to lessen the people's fear of the government and increase the government's fear of the people. The only thing that can do this is a demonstration of the existence, under the noses of the regime, of a revolutionary underground. Such an underground, by merely existing as such, accomplishes a good portion of this all-important task.

In order to take advantage of the Soviets' tightly stretched mechanism of control, Poremaki proposes a new organizational principle which he derives from an analysis of the factors that make an organization. The factors he finds are three: (a) community of ideas, goals, and symbols; (b) organizational structure; and (c) unity of action, i.e. coordination of concrete activity. Of the three, Poremaki says, the second factor is fraught with the greatest difficulty. However, a revolutionary headquarters located abroad can work out and promote a system of ideas, goals, and symbols; and it can, at least through radio or leaflet propaganda, generally coordinate the activities of separated revolutionaries in the target area.

The problem of organizational structure, Poremaki continues, can be solved in only one way if we have in mind a mass organization within the USSR. This is to create "molecules" of resistance, groups of one to three individuals (never more) who have no contact with other groups or "molecules" and thus are compartmented completely. These groups, he says, may be likened to molecules in a liquid which is being cooled (the cooling being representative of their subjection from without to revolutionary propaganda via leaflets, radio, personal contact and work of mouth, etc. which creates a community of ideas and coordinates action). When, under conditions of normal freezing point, actual crystallization will take place upon the delivery of an external shock. A degree more, and the shock need only be a slight one. Another degree, and the molecular activity itself provides sufficient shock to cause freezing. In the same way, the apparently chaotic nature of the revolutionary organizational structure which is recommended need not deceive us. Under adequate propaganda "cooling", the organization can quite suddenly link up--and the more propaganda, the less necessary external shocks such as war or other serious disturbances.

V. Operations

The basic purpose of NTS operations, from their own point of view, is to disseminate the revolutionary idea as widely as possible inside the USSR. The NTS is neglecting no means to accomplish this purpose. It is directing radio broadcasts to Soviet military personnel in the occupied areas of Europe, attempting to expand broadcast coverage to the USSR, distributing leaflets by hand and by balloon in the occupation areas, distributing leaflets in the USSR by long-range balloons and by placing them in the hands of Soviets temporarily outside the country or in shipments going to the USSR, is propagandizing Soviet personnel directly in personal contacts wherever it is possible to make such contacts abroad, and has dispatched clandestine agents into the USSR or recruited Soviets returning to the USSR to establish support points for its revolutionary activity in the country.

While the NTS has in fact carried on all these varying activities and has enjoyed some measure of success in all of them it is obvious that its efforts so far have been on a comparatively insignificant scale and that its accomplishments have been more potential than actual. [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] (s)

(s) [REDACTED] b1
[REDACTED] an operation conducted by the NTS [REDACTED] during b3 CIA
the summer of 1954 in Stockholm. This was on the occasion of a visit by ships of the Soviet Baltic Fleet.

The NTS first learned of the projected Soviet visit to Stockholm about a month prior to the arrival of the ships. The NTS staff at the Center in Germany assigned to Agent A, the organization's chief representative in Scandinavia, the mission of laying the groundwork for a propaganda distribution action combined with direct contact and defection-inducement approaches. Agent A recruited the sub-agents who were to participate in the operation and arranged for their housing and similar logistical support. Most of these agents were, of course, members of NTS. Agent B was sent to Stockholm from the Center to run the actual operation. Including Agents A and B, seventeen Russians from Sweden, Denmark and Germany, and two Swedes took part in the operation. Two of the Russians were women, who were especially effective in approaching the sailors.

The methods used in the operation fell into two broad categories, as follows:

1. Oral propaganda, which involved mingling with the officers and men on shore leave and engaging them in conversation; and

2. Written propaganda, which was either passed directly to the Soviet naval personnel or, in a few instances, left on board the Soviet ships.

The NTS displayed considerable ingenuity in concealing written propaganda for transmittal to the Soviet naval personnel. One of the most common devices was a matchbox containing a leaflet underneath the matches. The Soviet sailors were eager to obtain souvenirs and willingly accepted these matchboxes. Some of them were also left aboard the Soviet ships during public visits. Another "souvenir" which was well received by the Soviet visitors was an album containing views of Stockholm. The pictures were pasted with a special glue into these small albums on top of NTS leaflets. It was calculated that the glue would dry in a few weeks and that the presence of the leaflets would be discovered only after the return of the ships to Leningrad.

In many cases the Soviet personnel did accept propaganda material knowingly. Some of them permitted the material to be thrust into their pockets or under blouses or simply took it. The NTS tried to avoid compromising anyone by giving him material while under surveillance. They also made sure that the sailors knew what they were accepting after the existence of the propaganda distribution activity became known to the Soviet authorities.

While this Stockholm operation was primarily a propaganda effort, it can readily be seen that it had definite potentialities for defection. In this particular case no defection resulted. [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] On a subsequent visit, sailors and officers who participated in the first visit will expect to be contacted, and, if the seeds of defection have been planted, some individuals may be prepared to take positive steps.

b3 CIA

The NTS has already had considerable experience in hitting Soviet targets in foreign countries, particularly in the form of visiting cultural and trade delegations, sport teams, and local diplomatic installations. Aside from diffused efforts like the Stockholm operation (in which an estimated 150 contacts were made and about 7,000 leaflets were distributed), the NTS is in specific instances ideally suited for concentrated efforts against a single target. NTS has been very active in Western Europe in operations of the foregoing kind. Whether NTS is carrying out a diffused operation or attacking a single target, its members who have been operationally trained for this job make the approach not as representatives of a Western power, but as members of a Russian society interested as patriots in the welfare of their people and in their struggle against the Soviet government.

This is a very important point to bear in mind, [REDACTED] While many Soviets fail to react to orthodox techniques, they are vulnerable to approaches by persons who represent themselves as Russian patriots and who can appeal to their own sense of patriotism in fighting against Soviet oppression. The NTS has successfully induced defection or made a recruitment in a number of such cases. It should also be born in mind that while voluminous information on specific Soviet targets is available, it has often been difficult to find a means of making contact, and the NTS may help to bridge this gap.

The effect of NTS operations on the opposition can best be measured by Soviet countermeasures adopted to retaliate against NTS activity. In one case the Soviets succeeded in abducting the former chief of the overt NTS organization in Berlin. In another well-publicized case, an attempt was made by the Soviet MIB officer Khokhlov to assassinate the chief of the NTS covert apparatus in Frankfurt, Okolovich. Less dramatic but positive evidence of NTS success in getting its message to the Soviet people has been obtained from [redacted] Soviets willing to talk about the NTS. Many such individuals indicated that they were aware of the existence of the organization and those who were in a position to know revealed that the Soviet government had a real fear of NTS activities. The effectiveness of its propaganda is attested to by the favorable reactions of recent defectors and of Soviets who were given the opportunity of reading NTS material without having had any previous knowledge of the organization's existence.

b3 CIA

Bearing in mind the foregoing considerations, NTS is regarded as unusually well qualified to approach Soviets abroad and to appeal to them as Russian patriots to turn against the regime. [redacted]

NTS (NATIONAL LABOR UNION) SALESMEN AND AMERICAN BUYERS

by
B. VLODIN

We are all acquainted with the salesman who are such "smooth" talkers they can sell a rotten product for the perfect thing. Why is this comparison made?

Unfortunately, the Russian emigrants in Germany who are members of the NTS are doing this. They concoct all kinds of falsehoods and slander about the Soviet Union. The majority of the emigration knows that these pretended patriots are in the service of American Intelligence. Many of those who have been caught have admitted being members of this organization. People who have now broken with USA Intelligence also tell about the close contact between these two organizations.

However, these people are not living up to the expectations of their superiors. One of their lies after the other is being unmasked; their "provocations" do not get results; not a step of progress is being made.

NTS leaders are well aware of the fact that all these "failures" will cause the Americans to withhold the subsidies. Therefore, they are afraid and have decided to save the situation in any way possible.

First, they created the appearance of "work" on the spot. Alleged "branches" of the NTS appeared in the Soviet Union. To prove these branches were not figments of their imagination, they devised an "original" plan. They forged letters which were supposedly written by members of these nonexistent NTS groups. This is by no means an original method. It has been used for centuries.

The letters are sent in brief cases and unsuspecting tourists are chosen for the role of courier. Even though there are those who are willing to undertake such an assignment, there are others who turn the letters over to the authorities. HELMUTH K. did just that. His experience was published in the "Berliner Zeitung." Everybody can convince himself or herself as to the foul activities of the masters of deceit who have established themselves in West Berlin under the name of "Committee for the Aid of Russian Fugitives."

Bishop NATHANIEL is in charge of the West Berlin branch of the NTS. He is the American figurehead. This servant of God is worthy of the work entrusted to him. He has a rich experience in all kinds of dark machinations. He has even betrayed his colleagues. As early as 1923, in China, NATHANIEL, then Monk VASILY LVOV, led a very wild life and loved gold. In 1945, he stole the gold and silver church utensils from the Berlin Cathedral when he left for Paris. In Paris, he was seen running away, in pajamas, from an irate husband who had caught NATHANIEL in his wife's bedroom. And this Bishop is again officiating in Berlin.

HELMUTH K. told (in his article) about going to the USSR as a tourist. A certain "T.M." (alias for an NTS leader) learned about this, he entrusted H. K. with 10 letters to be delivered to friends in Moscow. However, H. K. was curious about the fact that the letters had Moscow returns. It turned out that all these letters were signed: "Moscow NTS Group." They contained anti-Soviet slander.

Other travelers have told the "Return Home Committee" about similar experiences. This is obviously a system of lies and deceit to prove the value of the NTS to the Americans.

Another thing is obvious from H. K.'s report; namely, the Americans are trying to entice the Germans into their service in order to sow hostility between the citizens of East and West Berlin and to keep the "cold war" going.

These attempts are destined to failure. It is not easy to find Germans willing to sell out their consciences. As true patriots, they report the sinister dealings of the NTS to proper authorities. Then, afraid of the wrath of their employers, NTS members start slandering the Americans.

THERE IS NO OBSTACLE TO HINDER YOUR RETURN

ANNA YAKOVLEVNA MISHINA tells her father, YAKOV (JACOB) IVANOVICH KOLESNIKOV in the United States (New York, Buffalo onida(P) (sic), 186) that she can read between the lines of his letters that he would return to the Homeland but that he is afraid of what punishment might be meted out to him. She assures him that nothing will happen to him. They are impatiently awaiting his return.

Gordon Young, author of "The House of Secrets" and a veteran correspondent, relates in the book an account of the Peoples Alliance of Russian Solidarists or, as it is more popularly known, the NTS (Narodno Trudovoi Soyuz), aka National Alliance of Russian Solidarists. The NTS is an organization of Russian emigres who believe that communism in the Soviet Union can be eventually overthrown through popular revolution. It has been an active group since 1930 in trying to introduce propaganda into the USSR. The
